

Dancing Sting takes his show on the road

STING has admitted that the frequently told story of how he used tantric yoga to achieve prolonged states of ecstasy while making love was 'a joke'.

But there was no doubting the 63-year-old rock singer's litheness when he began dancing outside a theatre in New York this weekend (right).

Sting joined the cast of his new musical, The Last Ship, for a stage-door performance at the Neil Simon theatre on Broadway. Wearing a T-shirt emblazoned with the show's title, the Police frontman clapped and danced alongside his cast, to the delight of onlookers.

The group were serenading the cast of The Jersey Boys — which is playing at the next-door theatre — with a rendition of the Lionel Richie song All Night Long.

Despite the serious subject matter of The Last Ship, which is about a group of redundant shipbuilders in the North of England, Sting and his troupe appeared to be enjoying themselves.

■ DAVID Dimbleby's personal politics have long been the subject of speculation, but could the BBC presenter be an anarchist? Recalling an appearance on Question Time in his memoirs, Anger Is An Energy, John Lydon writes that he was 'thrilled' at meeting Dimbleby, who is a 'smart bunny'. 'We had a good chat after the show,' the former Sex Pistol discloses. 'If you wanted to find someone whose political point of view was closest to mine, it would probably be someone like David.'

Sebastian Daily Mail, Monday, October 13, 2014

SHAK

Storm as Sadie launches lacy lingerie with daughter, 13

SADIE Frost had to apologise in 2012 after her 11-year-old daughter, Iris, was pictured alongside her at a fashion show wearing a dress patterned with slogans such as 'blow me' and 'eat sh*t'.

Now the actress, who also runs the fashion label FrostFrench with long-time friend Gemma French, has controversially enlisted Iris's help with designing a new lingerie line 'aimed at a younger, fashionable customer'.

The Iris & Edie line, created for Debenhams and named after Iris, now 13, and French's 16-year-old daughter, Edie, already encompasses pyjamas and loungewear.

But, from next month, it is expanding into lingerie with items such as brightly-coloured lace bras and knickers, which Iris, whose father is the actor Jude Law, helped design.

'Iris and Edie were a strong influence on the collection from the word go and we all had great fun creating sketch books of inspirations,' says Sadie (right) of the provocative line.

Critics, however, suggest the range potentially breaches the recommendations made by the 2011 Bailey

Review into the sexualisation of children, which was backed by David Cameron.

'If Debenhams are proposing to sell see-through pants named after an under-16 year-old, then they're not working within the spirit of the Bailey Review recommendations and we'd call on them to review their proposals,' says Roz Hardie, chief executive of Object, which campaigns against the objectification of women in the media.

'Particularly to link them to the names of under-16 year-olds, whether deliberate or not, is inappropriate.'

Debenhams was one of a number of retailers who signed up to guidelines on age-appropriate clothing for children issued by the British Retail Consortium in response to the Bailey Review recommendations.

A spokesman for Debenhams tells me: 'Iris & Edie by Frost French is aimed at a younger, fashionable customer. The range already comprises sleep and loungewear and now includes a new age-appropriate underwear and lingerie line.'

Iris, who was a bridesmaid at musician Jamie Hince, hit the headlines at the age of two when she almost died after swallowing an ecstasy tablet she found on the floor of private members' club Soho House.

Youthful design: FrostFrench's lingerie line

GLOBE TRAVEL AWARDS 2015

presented by

travelweekly

in partnership with

Mail Newspapers

Vote for your favourite travel company for the chance to WIN an amazing holiday experience from one of our exclusive partners*

Tell us your favourite:

Airline | Escorted Tours Operator | Ocean Cruise Company
UK Resort & Operator | Ferry Company | Hotel Chain | Long Haul Operator
River Cruise Company | Online Booking Website | Short Haul Operator

To register your vote visit www.travelmail.co.uk/globes2015

* For full terms and conditions see website

Top secret screening for the Middleton clan

WHEN the Duchess of Cambridge visited the World War II code-breaking facility at Bletchley Park earlier this year, she was keen to find out more about the role played there by her grandmother, Valerie Glassborow.

In 1944, Mike Middleton's mother, Valerie, managed the interception of enemy signals for decryption at Bletchley, the central site of the Government Code and Cypher School, which penetrated the secret communications of the Germans and their allies.

The code-breaking work done there is credited with shortening the war by at least two years.

Now, Kate and all the Middletons are to be invited to a private screening of The Imitation Game, a film starring Benedict Cumberbatch as Alan Turing, the pioneering mathematician and computer scientist who played a key role in decrypting German codes at Bletchley, in Buckinghamshire.

Harvey Weinstein, the Hollywood mogul behind the film, which also stars Keira Knightley, is understood to be setting up the screening.

On her visit to Bletchley in June, Kate tried her hand at decoding a Morse code message, putting on a pair of headphones (left) and finding the signal via a dial on the machine in front of her.

