The Life of A Fashionista Named Pretty

So today my live boyfriend Corey and I had a disagreement. This morning I had revealed to him that I had spent over $1000.00 for just one pair of shoes. And that's exactly what he screamed, "One pair of shoes Pretty? Just one, what happened to frugality?!!" Honestly, I didn't see what all the commotion was about. I mean my bills are paid two months in advance, my refrigerator is filled to the max with all the delightful foods of life and I have money in two savings accounts. Sheesh...I'd do it all over again. I mean I spend at least $1000.00 a month in clothes, shoes and accessories. You see, working as a fashion consultant to the stars and regulars calls for this, it comes with the territory you know. Besides I don't always spend, I sometimes receive clothing as a courtesy from the vendors and designers I do business with.

Well can you believe later on that night he phoned me to apologize for blowing his top? Well he just ought to be apologetic, nothing I did was illegal. Maybe once he sees me in the shoes he'll feel quite differently. I mean these pieces of art we call shoes are absolutely fab!! They boast an incredible 4" stiletto heel, taupe in color, heel of foot in and toe out with a brilliant intricate scalloped design on the edges, I had to have them! A new designer by the name of Myriad had a pop up shop down at my favorite boutique today. The minute I eyed them, I knew they would be mine.

Well any who, have to catch my 8:00p Pilates class which I am so loving right now. Did you know that I dropped a full dress size in 1 month!! Now I can go buy that couture dress I've been eyeing for some time now online. It's perfect but perfect comes with a $1200.00 price tag. Why not? Some may feel that this is a little over the top but who made a rule book as to what's considered over the top? I love fashion and it's something that I simply cannot deny. At the same time, I donate to organizations, my favorite being an inner city all-girls school out in Philadelphia. I volunteer my time to underprivileged children and women who are victims of crime, all of which I genuinely love doing. It sort of balances me both physically and spiritually. Well gotta run...can't be late. Till next time fashionistas!!!!
